In this instance great suffering was caused by the portions of food that became lodged upon the posterior margin of the cleft, causing considerable difficulty in swallowing; the voice was very imperfect from the rushing of air through the gap in the palate into the nose, and the throat was kept in a state of continual irritation from the great passage of cold air in the reverse direction--that is, from the nostrils into the back of the mouth. An instrument was made to close up this space in the manner shown in fig. 35. It was necessary that there should be perfect closure, and yet the power of depressing the elastic part of the obturator with the rest of the soft palate. The instrument was therefore constructed in the way shown in fig. 36. The front portion carrying the teeth that were out, of hard rubber, and a slip of gold running backwards to support the elastic rubber plug. Fig. 37 shows the two portions of the instrument apart. Fig. 37. This appliance answered all the purposes that were desired and necessary, and after its introduction into the mouth the patient not only had the satisfaction of finding his speech and power of swallowing restored, but also his general health very much improved, from the absence of the irritation that his defect had previously given rise to. Case Y.--Mrs. W, set. 29, sent to us for treatment in September, 1867. This...
