I may be mistaken, but when in the early eighties I was often up and down the stream I have no remembrance of smoke and factories; now the country right through from Belgium and up the whole left bank is seeded with them. Standing on the steamer near Neuwied I counted no less than thirty-two tall smoke-stacks visible at once. It is a remarkable demonstration of the growth and extent of German commercial enterprise. Notwithstanding all this the Rhine has lost none of its charm. Never have I seen the Drachenfels look more majestic, nor the many little towns more beautiful than on this June day. The latter have grown greatly in size during these years and new houses elbow their ancient fellows, but the architects have had the good sense to adapt modern improvements to the beautiful forms...
